

Exchangeable pairs and multivariate normal approximation

Elizabeth Meckes

Abstract: Stein's method of exchangeable pairs is a powerful method for proving probabilistic limit theorems by giving concrete bounds on the distance to the limiting distribution. I will review the method in general and its implementation in the case of normal approximation. I will then discuss a version for multivariate normal approximation (joint with Sourav Chatterjee), and give several applications.